Special Collections & University Archives
Duplication Policies

To assist scholars and patrons in their research, Binghamton University Libraries’ Special Collections will reproduce collection materials, in compliance with donor stipulations and with the fair use clause of the United States copyright law (Title 17, U.S. Code), when such reproduction can be done without injury to individual items. Our duplication policies are a result of our attempts to balance the needs of our researchers with our responsibility to be good stewards of our collections.

A signed Duplication Request form (available on request) is required for all duplication. All duplication requests must be reviewed on a case-by-case basis by a member of our professional staff. Special Collections reserves the right to refuse to duplicate materials on the basis of copyright, privacy, or condition. Special Collections reserves the right to refuse reproduction of its holdings and to impose such conditions as it may deem advisable in its sole and absolute discretion in the best interests of the repository.

Duplication is carried out by Special Collections staff members only. When the material permits duplication, the Special Collections reserves the right to select the reproduction process based on the physical condition, size, type, and quantity of material and availability of staff resources. Photography of any kind is prohibited. Hand-held copiers and scanners of any kind are not permitted.

In most cases, duplication is not done on demand and patrons must allow for turn-around time. Large or complicated orders may take longer and may be subject to an additional fee.

The Libraries follow the minimum standards of educational fair use. In applying these standards, Special Collections will copy up to 10% of a copyrighted work. Special Collections will not copy for the purpose of public performance. Our policy prohibits reproduction of an entire collection or work or significant portions of such. Multiple copies are not permitted under fair use.

In accordance with United States copyright law, reproductions made for patrons (regardless of format or subject matter) are provided for individual scholarly use. United States copyright law specifies that reproductions are not to be “used for any purpose other than private study, scholarship, or research.” Reproductions cannot be further reproduced, published, posted on the internet, or sold or deposited in another repository without the express written permission of Special Collections. If a patron makes a request for, or later uses, a reproduction for purposes in excess of “fair use,” that user may be liable for copyright infringement.

Special Collections reserves the right to refuse any order if, in its judgment, fulfillment of the order would involve violation of copyright law.

The sale of reproduction does not imply an authorization to publish. Please bear in mind that in almost all cases, Special Collections only owns the physical object and, therefore, does not assume responsibility for literary property, copyright, or any other legal issues involved in the publication and reproduction of items in its collections. In the case of both textual and visual materials (including photographs and works of art), it is the patron’s responsibility to obtain permission to publish texts and facsimiles from the owners of the copyright.

Applications to publish facsimile reproductions of items from the collections of Special Collections must be made via the Permission to Publish form available upon request.

JRG 04/23/09